Response to Instruction/Intervention (RTI)

RTI is described by the State Department of Education as a learning process that matches general education classroom instruction to each student's learning needs. In other words, educators respond to a student's academic and/or behavior challenge with the right amount of intensity in classroom learning supports. These instruction techniques are called interventions. Progress Monitoring measures student success by frequently using checkpoints to measure performance. Check points, including the use of standardized test results, data collection charts and/or classroom observations, display an instant picture on the impact of the intervention.

The policy of the Georgia Board is that RTI workshops and seminars are not directly related to therapy techniques and therefore are considered a related area to the practice of speech and language therapy and can provide up to .2 (or 2 hours) toward continuing education credits.

This policy adopted at the April 10, 2010 meeting.
